□□ Account Creation

As with any collaborative software you first need to make an account before you can contribute. As you might have noticed, Deternet has split its different sectors in different Bookstack instances for simplicity. In this way users can completely focus on one thing without being distracted with information they don't necessarily need in that moment.

Now, this does also mean if you want to contribute to multiple instances that you need to create multiple accounts for each instance. Therefore, you have two options to choose user names

1. If you want to be public then we recommend to create the same handle/username on each instance. In this way people know your credibility and trust commits more quickly.
2. The other option is of course to stay anonymous and use different handles for each instance.
